ADAPTIVE FUTURES

Sustainability in Community Development

The conference will explore the idea of a social, political, and environmental tipping point aiming to explore our evolving world, encouraging participants to engage in insightful discussions, and imagine a future that is drastically reformed, rewired, and more positive than ever.

This theme is based on the observation that our world is currently undergoing rapid and significant changes. The conference will delve into these transformations, focusing on how they are reshaping our lives, communities, and societies. As we experience monumental shifts in technology, politics, and social dynamics, societal norms are constantly being redefined.

The conference will provide a platform for discussions on how these norms shape our behavior, values, and societal structures, and how we can positively influence these norms for a more inclusive and equitable society. We will also explore Social Prescribing - a growing movement that connects people with a range of non-clinical programs, services, and events in their local community to support their overall health and wellbeing. The conference will host a debate on its merits, challenges, and potential role in community development.

Those who attend can anticipate acquiring valuable, actionable takeaways and innovative responses to the needs of their communities. Insights will be drawn from a range of local and interstate perspectives, expanding their understanding of broader trends and strategies. In addition to these learning opportunities, attendees will also have plenty of chances to network. This will not only enable them to meet other professionals in the field but also to exchange ideas and forge new professional relationships.

There will be an abundance of professional resources and knowledge provided, which they can utilise and integrate into their work long after the conference has ended. Attendees will walk away from the conference feeling not just refreshed and re-energised, but also equipped with a wealth of new ideas, strategies, and contacts to support their future endeavors.
